

The Day The Blue Whale Saved The Penguins

The Blue Whale cried when he saw the melt, his friends the penguins needed help;
so he rode the flow to its opposite ice cap
and lay across hoping it wouldn't snap.
As the penguins made their way across his back,
he swore though painful, he'd save the pack,
of the buddies that always shared their fish;
to give of himself was his greatest wish.
one-by-one, the birds got to safety
as the proud whale finished, dove hastily.
